Q2: How will you apply the course content to your current job assignment? (skip if not applicable)

The material for the course was designed for first time facilitators. About half of the participants seemed to be returning facilitators who just needed to re-certify under NB 3.0. As a returning facilitator, it would have been much more useful to me, to spend less time on "how to be a facilitator" and more time, on digging into the new Components. It would have also been useful to hear more from other experienced facilitator about their favorite "tricks" and tools, rather than basic facilitator knowledge. A lot of what we did, was exactly the same as the material we covered in my first facilitator training years ago, and that i have been teaching and using for years now. I think it might be useful to divide the trainings into two groups. A complete training for brand new facilitators, and a separate 2-day training for experienced facilitators with more focus on collaboratively understanding the Components, and sharing tricks, tools and ideas.
